Project Overview

McMahon Services apply a fresh coat of paint to over 580 houses across the Northern Territory.

This short, yet intensive project was part of the Federal Government’s Community Clean Up Program, involving the painting of over 580 homes in 12 selected communities across the Northern Territory.

This successful project encouraged local communities to get involved and assist tradespeople in transforming their houses and community buildings.

McMahon Services were eager to get involved in the project, aimed at giving back to Indigenous communities. Our team worked closely with the local Indigenous people, and remained respectful of the each community’s different cultural sensitivities.

McMahon Services also completed another Community Clean Up Program contract, which involved the completion of asbestos audits throughout 72 Indigenous communities in the Northern Territory.
